PART 1: READING COMPREHENSION

Duration: 45 Min. (Part 1 total) | Max. 25 Points

TASK 1: READING AN IN-DEPTH BUSINESS ARTICLE

10 Points (2 points per question)

Read the following article from a business journal and answer questions 1 to 5. Mark the correct answer (a, b, or c).

The Four-Day Work Week: Future Workplace Model or Economic Risk?

Across the world, an increasing number of companies are exploring a radical transformation of the workplace: introducing a four-day work week with full wage compensation. This arrangement means that employees work 32 or 35 hours over four days instead of the traditional 40 hours across five days, while receiving the exact same monthly salary into their bank accounts. What once sounded like an unrealistic demand from labor unions is now being tested by numerous craft businesses, manufacturing facilities, and tech companies in real workplace conditions.

One prominent example is Markus Weber's plumbing and heating company in Cologne. Two years ago, Weber found it nearly impossible to recruit qualified technicians. Young candidates openly stated during job interviews that personal time, health, and family were far more important to them than earning extra pay through overtime. In response, Weber completely restructured his operations: his 18 staff members now work nine hours a day from Monday to Thursday, while the headquarters remains closed on Fridays – with the exception of an emergency on-call service organized on weekly rotation.

The outcome astonished even the business owner himself. "In the beginning, I was deeply worried that we wouldn't finish client orders on time and would lose our customer base," admits Weber. Yet the exact opposite occurred: the number of sick days dropped by almost 40 percent in the first year. Moreover, internal workflows were digitized and unnecessary meetings were eliminated, leading to a substantial increase in productivity per working hour. The recruitment crisis was resolved as well: since the change, Weber has received more than 50 unsolicited applications from highly skilled workers.

Despite these inspiring success stories, economic experts caution against imposing a mandatory four-day week across all sectors by law. In public hospitals, emergency transit systems, and the hospitality sector, tasks cannot simply be carried out faster. If a bus driver works 20 percent fewer hours, buses inevitably run 20 percent less frequently – unless additional drivers are hired, who are already in severe shortage in the labor market. A four-day work week is therefore a powerful strategy for individual enterprises, but by no means a one-size-fits-all solution for the entire economy.

1. What is meant by a four-day work week "with full wage compensation"?

- ☐ a) Employees work ten hours every day for four days to earn the same salary.
- ☐ b) Employees work fewer total hours per week while receiving the same salary.
- ☐ c) Employees accept a 20 percent pay reduction in order to take Fridays off.

2. Why did Markus Weber decide to introduce the four-day week in his company?

- ☐ a) Because his staff members were constantly taking sick leave and making errors.
- ☐ b) Because labor authorities and unions legally compelled his business to do so.
- ☐ c) Because he faced severe difficulties in attracting qualified, skilled workers.

3. How is working time organized in Weber's company today?

- ☐ a) Every single employee has Friday off without any exception whatsoever.
- ☐ b) Staff work longer shifts over four days, with only an emergency team on Friday.
- ☐ c) Individual workers choose flexibly on their own which four days to attend.

4. What was the direct result of this reorganization for Weber's business?

- ☐ a) Employees took significantly fewer sick days and demonstrated greater focus.
- ☐ b) Several loyal clients transferred to competitors because of Friday closure.
- ☐ c) Staff spent excessive hours in prolonged discussions about software upgrades.

5. Why are economic experts skeptical about enforcing a four-day week across all sectors?

- ☐ a) Because the majority of workers in modern industry prefer working five days.
- ☐ b) Because in essential service professions, reduced hours cannot be compensated by faster work.
- ☐ c) Because implementing technology in municipal buses and clinics is too expensive.

TASK 2: READERS' OPINIONS & LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

10 Points (2 points per question)

Read the three opinion pieces on the topic "Should city centers become completely car-free?" and evaluate statements 6–10: True [T] or False [F].

Post 1 – Sabine K. (44, Shop Owner)

"Banning cars entirely from city centers would mean financial ruin for many independent retailers. My customers frequently travel from suburban areas specifically to make substantial purchases. Nobody wants to haul heavy shopping bags on crowded trams for miles. Before banning cars, municipal authorities must first build free park-and-ride facilities on the outskirts and cut public transit fares in half."

Post 2 – Lukas M. (29, Architect)

"I live right downtown and can hardly tolerate the noise, fumes, and traffic congestion anymore. Forward-thinking cities like Copenhagen and Amsterdam have shown that pedestrian zones dramatically enhance quality of life! People relax at open-air cafés where bumper-to-bumper traffic once crawled, and store revenues have actually climbed because pedestrians and cyclists stop to browse far more spontaneously than drivers."

Post 3 – Herbert W. (68, Retiree)

"This discussion is far too polarized. Naturally, we should reduce urban traffic, but an outright ban completely marginalizes elderly or mobility-impaired individuals who depend on vehicles. An urban congestion toll for non-essential drivers would be much more sensible than a total prohibition. Craftsmen, delivery vehicles, and local residents should, of course, continue to enter free of charge."

PART 5B: COLLABORATIVE PROBLEM-SOLVING — 7.5 Points (~6 Min.)

Scenario: Planning a Surprise Graduation Weekend for a Close Friend

Negotiate and plan together with your partner / examiner:

- Destination & Lodging: Coastal beach camping, a mountain cabin in the Atlas, or a city boutique hotel?
- Transport & Mobility: Booking train tickets, renting minivans, or organizing carpools among friends?
- Budget & Costs: What total budget per person is realistic for 15 friends? Who covers the graduate's portion?
- Task Allocation: Who handles bookings, who buys food and supplies, and who distracts the friend until the surprise?

Tip: Make constructive suggestions, listen to your partner's counterarguments, and negotiate an agreeable compromise.

TASK 1: SHORT ANNOUNCEMENTS (Read each text ONCE • Questions 16 to 20)

Number 16 (Dr. Keller's Dental Clinic):

"Good morning, Mrs. Schneider. This is Sabine Neumann calling from Dr. Keller's dental practice. I am calling to confirm your routine check-up appointment tomorrow morning at 9:00 a.m. The appointment will go ahead as scheduled, but since we recently upgraded to a new digital management system, we kindly request that you bring your new electronic health insurance card. In addition, Dr. Keller asked me to remind you to bring an updated list of any medications you are currently taking. Thank you very much, and we will see you tomorrow!"

Number 17 (Station Announcement – Regional Train RB 42):

"Attention, passengers on regional train RB 42 bound for Neustadt Central Station: Due to severe storm damage that occurred overnight, the railway bridge between South Square and East Station must undergo urgent structural inspection and repairs. Consequently, this service will terminate unscheduled at East Station today. For passengers continuing towards Central Station, please transfer to the rail replacement shuttle buses waiting directly outside on the station forecourt."

Number 18 (Regional Weekend Weather Forecast):

"And now, here is the weekend weather outlook for the southern region: Be sure to take full advantage of Saturday for any outdoor excursions! With widespread sunshine, afternoon temperatures will comfortably reach a pleasant 24 degrees Celsius. Sunday morning will remain dry at first, but by early afternoon, thick clouds will roll in from the west. Expect heavy thunderstorms, downpours, and gusty winds, accompanied by a sharp drop in temperatures to just 13 degrees."

Number 19 (Dream-Home Furniture – Mr. Berger):

"Hello, Mr. Albers. This is Berger calling from Dream-Home Furnishings regarding your order from last month: the large solid oak dining table and six matching leather chairs. Delivery was originally scheduled for next Wednesday. However, another client on our Friday delivery route had to cancel at short notice, which means our delivery team can now deliver your complete set this Friday between 10:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. Please give us a quick call back to confirm whether someone will be home."

Number 20 (City Museum Telephone Information Service):

"Welcome to the automated information line of the City Museum. Our exhibitions are open Tuesday through Sunday from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Please take note of an important advisory for this Sunday: Due to the annual City Marathon, all access roads surrounding the museum district, as well as our visitor car park, will be strictly closed to vehicular traffic from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Visitors are strongly advised to travel by public transport via Subway Line 4. The museum galleries will be open as normal."

TASK 2: RADIO INTERVIEW (Read dialogue TWICE • Questions 21 to 25)

Presenter: "A very good morning to all our listeners on Radio Current Affairs! Final school certificates are around the corner, and hundreds of thousands of young people face a vital choice: should I head straight to university, or would I be better off pursuing practical vocational training in a business? Here in the studio to discuss this is professional career consultant Thomas Richter. Mr. Richter, is it still true that nearly everyone wants to study at university?"

Thomas Richter: "Good morning! Yes, societal pressure towards an academic degree remains extraordinarily high, even though it's not quite 80 percent, but currently just over half of a school-leaving cohort that enrolls in university. The alarming issue, however, is that nearly 30 percent of students in undergraduate bachelor programmes drop out before completing their degrees."

Presenter: "Why is that? Are young people today simply less resilient?"

Thomas Richter: "Not at all. The problem is that many enroll at university simply assuming it is a natural continuation of secondary school. They are then utterly shocked by how theoretical and abstract university education is, and by the enormous degree of self-organization required. Many discover only after two full semesters that they actually prefer practical, hands-on work where they can see a tangible outcome of their labor at the end of the day."

Presenter: "Even so, many parents worry that a vocational apprenticeship means lower lifetime earnings."

Thomas Richter: "That is an outdated prejudice! Look at skilled trades or technical fields today: someone who completes an apprenticeship as an electrician, heating engineer, or mechatronics technician and subsequently qualifies as a master craftsman often earns as much as or more than many university graduates – with virtually zero risk of unemployment. Moreover, apprentices earn an independent income from day one, whereas university graduates frequently enter the workforce carrying heavy student debts."

Presenter: "And what advice do you offer to young people torn between academic theory and practical training?"

Thomas Richter: "For them, a dual study programme is the ideal pathway. You sign an employment contract with a sponsoring firm and alternate every three months between practical workplace training and academic lectures at a partner college. It demands intense dedication, but offers outstanding career prospects. My foremost advice to parents is this: never pressure your child into university merely because the neighbor's son is studying law or because it sounds prestigious. What truly matters is where the young person's genuine talents and passions lie."

TASK 3: WORKPLACE CONVERSATION (Read conversation ONCE • Questions 26 to 30)

Anna: "David, remember our manager asked us to gather ideas by Friday for our annual company outing in June? Have you had a chance to think about it?"

David: "Yes, a bit. One thing is certain: we definitely shouldn't do a long mountain trek like last year! When the rain started in the afternoon, everyone got completely soaked and spirits hit rock bottom."

Anna: "You're completely right. That rainy hike was a complete catastrophe; I hated it too! That's why I was thinking of an indoor activity this time. How about a professional culinary workshop at a cooking school? Preparing a three-course dinner in small teams would allow us to get to know our new colleagues in accounting much better than merely sitting beside each other in a restaurant."

David: "Hmm, I'm not sure. Some colleagues don't enjoy cooking at all. I thought a relaxed riverboat cruise with an evening buffet on board would be far more laid-back."

Anna: "I actually looked into that exact boat idea yesterday online. The catch is our budget: the company covers a maximum of 50 Euros per employee. An evening cruise with dinner costs at least 68 Euros without drinks, so that's unfortunately out of reach."

David: "What a pity! Yes, if it exceeds 50 Euros, finance definitely won't sign off on it. But on another note: don't you think the trip should take place on a working Friday again? If we schedule it on a Saturday, half the team will decline because of family commitments."

Anna: "Actually, I wouldn't mind Saturday since there's no rush. But you know what? Why don't we put down your idea of a shorter afternoon river cruise without dinner alongside my cooking workshop proposal? We can submit both options to management and let the team vote by email."

David: "Perfect, let's do that! Having the team vote is by far the fairest solution."
